Provenance:
Al-Mrōshan, Al-Suwaydah, Syria
[Latitude/Longitude: 32.844275 / 37.19575]
Al-Mrōshan consists of four long, low mounds, running roughly east-west in a flat area where the Wādī al-Gharz spreads out. These mounds create a series of "gorges" perhaps 3 m high in the wadi which is otherwise very flat and at this point hardly distinguishable from the surrounding area, the "wadi-bed" consisting of several channels approximately 30–80 cm deep and 4–10 m wide. The southerly three mounds are covered with graves and enclosures. Much of the rock is not suitable for inscribing. It was visited in 1995 by the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme and all the published texts it rediscovered came from the most northerly of the southern three mounds, and most were concentrated at its eastern end.

[Latitude/Longitude: 32.844275 / 37.19575]
Al-Mrōshan consists of four long, low mounds, running roughly east-west in a flat area where the Wādī al-Gharz spreads out. These mounds create a series of "gorges" perhaps 3 m high in the wadi which is otherwise very flat and at this point hardly distinguishable from the surrounding area, the "wadi-bed" consisting of several channels approximately 30–80 cm deep and 4–10 m wide. The southerly three mounds are covered with graves and enclosures. Much of the rock is not suitable for inscribing. It was visited in 1995 by the Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme and all the published texts it rediscovered came from the most northerly of the southern three mounds, and most were concentrated at its eastern end.

Apparatus Criticus:
C b- qf "in scarcity" for "spring herbage"; ng' b- ry s'rqt "he wept because the land was watered: he was plundered [?]" for "which was wholesome because it was well-watered s'rqt"

Commentary:
The verb ng' has several meanings in Safaitic. Here, it seems to refer to the quality of the pasture, compare Classical Arabic nağa'a "to be wholesome, beneficial [food]" (Hava p. 752a). Here we would suggest it is in a circumstance clause referring to the clause r'y h- nhī l bql. The phrase b-ry would then give the reason it was beneficial, compare Classical Arabic ṣā'ī "in relation to plants herbage, or to trees" the state of having plentiful irrigation..." (Lane 1195c). We are unable to suggest a meaning for s'rqt here.

(-----)ṣyw ʼṣḥ l-dqr

and may the planting be well watered

Apparatus Criticus:
C: w ṣḥ l-dqr "and abundant irrigation for a garden" for "and may the planting be well watered"

Commentary:
The inscription shown on this copy is too fragmentary to allow any interpretation to be offered with confidence (see Macdonald 2009: I, 317, n. 96). If this interpretation is correct, the planting could refer either to opportunistic sowing of grain in the desert (see Macdonald 2009: I, 316–318, and n. 106). It is worth noting that this text was reputedly found at the point where the Wādī al-Gharz douches into the Ruḥbah, a large alluvial plain which is the largest area in the ḥarrab for opportunistic agriculture. Nevertheless, it should be stressed that, while this interpretation may be possible, given the problematic copy, it can be no more than a suggestion.

Commentary:
The translation offered here is based on the following. We have interpreted ṭry on the basis of Syriac karā “to grieve [for someone]” which can take either ʾal or la- (Sokoloff 2009: 650b). Grammatically, there is no way of telling whether the author or h-rmy is the subject of this verb, but there seems no identifiable reason why a Roman should grieve for this man’s son and so it is more likely that it was the author who was grieving. In this case h-rmy must refer to the son, ʾys¹. This does not mean, of course, that he was a Roman citizen (though depending on the date, it could be possible that he was). It is more likely that he had gone to work for the Romans, either as a soldier or in another capacity, and was called h-rmy by his family because of this. An alternative interpretation of h-rmy would be “the archer”, compare Classical Arabic ramā “to shoot an arrow” (Lane 1161a). Either way, he was apparently in trouble and his father was worried for him.

{Mʾdʾl} {was here} the year of much rain and he hunted on the level ground

Apparatus Criticus:
C: w syd h- gdd “and he fished in this pool”

Commentary:
For ġt compare Classical Arabic ġayt “rain over a wide area, rain that is productive of much good” (Lane 2314b). C interprets gdd from Classical Arabic ġad which he translates as “stagnant water at the edge of the desert”. However, it appears that it is actually used of “a well [rather than a pool] in a place where there is much herbage” (Lane 385c, Groom 1983: 131–132, under “Judd”) which would not be a suitable place for fishing. It should be noted, however, that fishing can certainly take place in desert pools where water has collected and has remained for several months. The Safaitic Epigraphic Survey Programme in 1996 saw a number of fishermen on the lake formed by the dam at Al-Namārah, and was given a fish, some 30 cms long, which one of them had caught. However, in this case, it seems more likely that gdd is to be compared to Arabic ġadad “hard, level ground” (Lane 386c).

C: \{ff\}[n]y for ---(y); f h ylt hyy l- \textsuperscript{r}d s\textsuperscript{2}r " and O Y'[grant] life to the one who leaves [it] unimpaired"

Commentary:

There is no justification on the copy for C’s restoration of the second name as \{ff\}[n]y. C suggests that w wlh f wlh could be due to dittography but this seems unlikely given the different conjunctions used. Literally it means "he was distraught and then he was distraught", which we have translated as "he was distraught over and over again", presumably every time one or more of his companions died or was in trouble. On the vocative particle by see Al-Jallad 2015: 158–159, and for the meaning of of s'value see Al-Jallad 2015: 339–340.

By ʾḥlm son of ʾbdʾl son of Sʾddt and he found an inscription by Mȝṯ and so he wept and he was slain may he have security and so O Lt [grant] security to him who remains and O ʾlt Dṯn [infl] misfortune on whoever scratches out the carving

Apparatus Criticus:
C: w wgd sʾfrn mȝṯ "and he found the inscriptions of Mȝṯ" for w wgd sʾfr lʾ-mȝṯ "he found an inscription by Mȝṯ"; sʾlm lʾ ṭ lʾ-yʾwr "security to the one who leaves [it] unimpaired"

Commentary:
C’s reading w wgd sʾfrn mȝṯ "and he found the inscriptions of Mȝṯ" is, of course, impossible. As he noted in his commentary, the n of sʾfrn would be dropped in annexation. We have therefore suggested reading not n but l and to read w wgd sʾfr lʾ-mȝṯ "he found an inscription by Mȝṯ". In this, lʾ would echo the beginning of most inscriptions and in particular C 4983 (I mȝṯ bn lʾʾmm) which is also the only inscription by a Mȝṯ recorded in this vicinity, another reason to doubt the reading sʾfrn. For ḡrz compare Classical Arabic ḡaraza-khu “he slew him” (Lane 408c), here in the passive. The expression ḥʾlt h sʾlm probably stands for ḥʾlt bʾsʾlm hʾḥṭṭ in which the definite article has been assimilated to the preceding 3rd person singular eclectic pronoun. Compare Arabic ‘ālay-ḥi al-salām. For the meaning of of sʾfr see Al-Jallad 2015: 339–340. On ʾlt Dṯn see Macdonald, Al Muʿazzin & Nehmé 1996: 474–476 and n. 117.

I š(ʾ)r ḫn ḏbd bn šʾl d w ṛʾh-ʾ- ḥrmṯ ḏql w ṣḏw ʾl- bnyt w ʾl- ṃ-h w ʾl- ḡfnt f h lt šʾlm l- ʾdg šʾlg

By Ṣʾd son of ḏbd son of šʾl d and he pastured this [region of] ancient wells on spring herbage and he grieved for a young daughter and and for her mother and for ḡfnt and so O Lt [grant] security for him who šʾlg

Apparatus Criticus:
C: šʾd ḫn ḏʾ(ʾ)r(z) bn šʾl d w ṛʾy h-ʾʾ(ʾ)rmṯ ḏq w ṣḏw ʾl- bnyt w ʾl- ṃ-h w ʾl- ḡfnt f h lt šʾlm l- ʾdg šʾʾ(ʾ)(r)

Commentary:
The letters in the copy appear clear and consistent, thus there is definite distinction between ṁ and ḡ, which important in the interpretation of some sections (see below). The inscription contains several unusual features. Firstly, the phrase h-ʾ- ḥrmṯ is probably a rare example of the demonstrative h-ʾ “this” followed by definite article ʾ-ʾ-, see Al-Jallad 2015: 78–79, 83. We have interpreted ḥrmṯ on the basis of Arabic ḥarām “ancient wells” (Lane 2892a) and, since ṛʾy is usually followed by the area pastured and/or the type of pasture, we have taken it as referring to a “region of ancient wells”. If we are right in taking bnyt as “a young daughter”, the following ṃ-h could refer either to “his” [i.e. the author’s] mother or to her [i.e. the daughter’s] mother, i.e. the author’s wife. There is no way of deciding this. The word ḡfnt could, of course, also refer simply to “a young girl”. The final word of the prayer is also problematic. The last letter can only be a ḡ not a ṁ, and Cʾs emendation to the common šʾʾ(ʾ)(r), is rather drastic. We cannot find a suitable interpretation for this.

Commentary:
We are unable to offer an interpretation of tlyt bnyd and C’s emendation to b- n(d)drḥbt and translation as "in the hills of the Rḥbt" is inappropriate since the Rḥbah, as its name suggests, is a shallow depression not a hilly area. l ḏ bn sḥr bn (sʿ) by bn hdṃ bn mrz w (rʿ)y (ʾ)bl ṭ(t)y) yḥ l t qʿwsʿ yʿwr (ḥ- ) ----

Apparatus Criticus:
C: [ʾ]ḥ(d) for sʿby; [ʾ]dm for hdṃ; m(sʿ)(k) for mrz; f h lt qʿ w sʿ[l] [w]ʿwr l- [d] [y][w][r] (----) "and C Lt revenge and destruction and (blindness) to [him who scratches out] ----".

Commentary:
On the copies, the first letter of (rʿ)y is quite different from the other examples of r in the text but it is difficult to see what else it could be. The next phase, as it stands in the copy, would only be grammatical if it meant "the ʿTy pastured the camels", which does not seem very likely, and so we have adopted C's emendation of ḏ to (ʾ) giving w rʿy "bl ṭ(t)y) "he pastured the camel herds of the ʿTy". Although, in Arabic ʾibl is a collective or "quasi-plural" and hence is feminine, it nevertheless has a plural ābāl used of "herds [of camels]" (Lane 8b). It is possible that "bl here represents such a plural, if the emendation is correct. The copy appears to be corrupt at the end of the text. C's attempts to read it do not make much sense and we have had to leave qʿwsʿ untranslated.

Mithnayat Wādī Rāǧil, Al-Mafraq, Jordan

According to Dussaud & Macler (1903: 29 [431]) Mithnayat Wādī Rāǧil or Dayr al-ShaʾĪr was a ruined and deserted village. They found crosses on several lintels and a small place with a qiblah which had been used as a mosque. The cisterns, one of which was covered, were remarkable and there was a large birkah (reservoir) with a partially preserved staircase going down into it. In the early 1980s, when it was visited by the Jawa Epigraphic Survey which recorded a number of inscriptions there (see the MKMR texts), it was again inhabited.

l gṯm' b- ḏwy

By Gṯm' at Dūrā

Apparatus Criticus:
Torrey 1931: 175: l gṯm' b dw "Of Gṯm Abi Dw";

C: l gṯm 'l dwy "By Gṯm [of] the tribe of Dwyl [?]"

Commentary:
The reading here is that made by Macdonald (2005: 119–121) from the photograph by R. Bertolino. The final letter of the text is a clear y and it is separated from the w by a r, though this is rather faint on the photograph. Neither gṯm nor gṯm' have been found before in Safaitic, but compare the Arabic name ġ aşāmah used for both a man and a woman [see Lidzbarski 1902–1915, iii: 137] or the woman's name, gṯmy, which has been found twice in a Palmyrene inscription (CIS ii 4604 A1 and B 3). We would suggest that the 'ṯ at the end of gṯm' represents either the Aramaic emphatic ending, which is occasionally found on personal names in Safaitic, see the list in Winnett & Harding 1978: 19, though note that the majority of these are paralleled by forms of the same name with the Safaitic article, h-, e.g. 'bd-ṯ / h-ḏw, whereas, to the best of our knowledge, a name 'h-gṯm has not yet been found in Safaitic. Alternatively, it could be the hypocoristic ending 'ṯ which, like -y, is quite common on one-word names in Palmyrene. The name in this text could be that of either a man or a woman. If our reading and interpretation are correct, this is an extremely unusual Safaitic inscription, for two reasons. Firstly, to the best of our knowledge, this is the only text in this script in which the author has identified him- or herself simply by his/her name and the fact that he/she is in a particular geographical location (though compare Ms 64). A second peculiar feature of this text would be the use of matres lectionis. Normally, Safaitic inscriptions are written entirely without vowels or medial diphthongs. However, here it is probable that the 'ṯ of the personal name represents /aʾ/ and, if dwy represents the name of the city, then the w must represent medial /ū/. The name appears as dwy' in two texts in the Palmyrene script from the city (PAT 1085/2 and 1094/1) and the use of -y in the Safaitic form to represent the final sound which appears as 'ṯ in Palmyrene can be paralleled by the spelling bsy' (Bostra) in a Safaitic text (SI 78) compared with bsr' in Nabataeans (see Macdonald 2005: 121, n. 15). The combination of the form of the personal name and the use of matres lectionis, suggests that the author was more familiar with Aramaic orthographic conventions than with those of the Safaitic graffiti. Commentary:
Unfortunately, Torrey did not publish the two copies and a squeeze available to him, since "the drawings do not agree with each other nor with the squeeze and it is impossible to make out anything legible" (1931: 175). This is borne out by R Bertolino's photograph on which the letters are so faint, and the surface so covered with other marks, that it is not possible to make a coherent reading.

Apparatus Criticus:
Torrey 1931: 176, followed by C: \(l\) \(n\)\{ṣ\} \(r\)\(y\)\(h\)\(b\).

Commentary:
Torrey did not interpret the first sign and read the rest as \(l\)\(n\)\{ṣ\} \(r\)\(y\)\(h\)\(b\). However, the photograph shows a finely scratched \(ṣ\) or possibly an \(ḩ\); before the first sign copied by Torrey. It is in a different technique from the rest of the text, but it looks deliberate and there is no sign of another inscription to which it might belong. After the \(ṣ\) there appears to be an elongated \(w\) and this is followed by a shallow \(z\) or a flying at 90° to the direction of the text. The form of the letter is clear, only its value is ambiguous. However, \(z\) in this context does not seem to produce a possible name and I would therefore take the letter as \(f\), reading the name as \(swf\) or \(wf\). The former has not been found before in Safaitic, but is a perfectly possible name.

Compare, for example, Arabic sawwāf "a wool-merchant". If, on the other hand, the name is \(wf\), this has been found once before in Safaitic and is presumably a diminutive of the more common name \(f\), perhaps \(ʷ\)\(U\)\(w\)\(a\)\(f\). On the photograph the \(b\) of \(bn\) is clear and the \(n\) seems to be a dot between its arms. The next letter is not at all certain but on the photograph looks like a \(k\), the loop to one side of the stem on Torrey’s copy being, in fact, two short bars whose ends do not appear to be joined. At first sight, the next sign looks like a \(h\) and was so copied by Torrey. However, on the photograph, the side stroke seems to be part of a long extraneous scratch below the letter, and the sign is probably a \(l\). The last letter is probably a \(b\). The short line transecting the curve seems, on close examination, to be extraneous. The name Klb is, of course, well-attested in Safaitic. Apparatus Criticus:
Torrey 1931: 176, followed by C: h- s’rb w- h- bd ḍb “the camel train and Bedouin ḍb”.

Commentary:
A band of rough lime runs through centre of the letters, obscuring parts of them. We have taken the first letter as ṣ, though the loop is barely visible on the photograph. The upper part of the second letter is very faint while the lower is very thick and touches the rather square h which follows. The b of bn is clear and seems to be followed by two dots n’s cut into the band of lime which runs through the middle of the s’ which follows. This is presumably the reason that Torrey copied it as a h, though he read it as a w. There is no sign on the photograph of the stem of the next letter which Torrey copied as a h. Instead there is a third, fainter “prong” to the left of the other two, making it a h at 90° to the direction of the text, or more likely a k. The following bn is clear and the next letter is probably a y. What at first sight appears to be part of the stem above the loop can, on closer examination, be seen to be a thinner line which is not quite joined to the letter. The lower half of the next letter does not show up well on the photograph but is consistent with it being a d, as shown on Torrey’s copy, and the final letter is different from the bs and is perhaps more likely to be a r. The first name, if we have read it correctly, is very well attested in Safaitic, and the second is also known. The third has been found only once before in this form, in ISB 58, where it is at the top end of a genealogy of eleven generations. Commentary:
The reading and interpretation here is that of Macdonald 2005: 124. Unfortunately R. Bertolino was unable to rediscover this inscription at Dura Europos and so we do not have a photograph of it. According to Torrey the "text runs down [the pillar] perpendicularly, then [turns] horizontally to the right ... halfway around, then turns again in a perpendicular line" (1932: 66-67). To judge from Torrey's facsimile (copied from the squeezes) and his description, the text was well-cut and the reading of the letters seems clear. The signs for g', and a are well distinguished and the only letter with an unusual form is g', which both Torrey and C read as b', though its value is not in doubt thanks to the expression g' l. The first name has been found in three other Safaitic inscriptions (JaS 160.2, KRS 1828, MAHB 3) and the second is fairly well-attested. However, the "tribal" name, m'gm', is so far unique and, at first sight, would seem to belong to the small number of names found occasionally in Safaitic which end in an "which is not part of the root, e.g. 'n' (WH 147), qdm'

Mac 1972: 43)". In each of these cases, however, the letters before the "represent elsewhere the non-divine element in theophoric names, thus, for instance, 'n', qdm', tm', etc. This is not the case, however, with m'gm', which, anyway, would not make a suitable element in such a name. At present, we can offer no explanation of this ethnicon. Hgd, the first of the two names after ts²'twq 'l-, has not been found before. Assuming that Torrey's facsimile is accurate, there can be no doubt about the reading. The etymology is, however, much more difficult. The second name gbt may have been found once before in Safaitic, in C 3767 though even here the reading is not entirely certain. We have taken b' as the equivalent of Arabic ba't, ba'at and ba'at meaning "someone or something sent", hence "a messenger", or "an army, force, or patrol that is sent out" (Lane 223b). N'm could be a personal name, or the equivalent of Arabic na'am "camels and sheep and/or goats when pasturing", or of Arabic na'am "blessing, comfort, enjoyment, well-being" (Lane 3035b-c). There are thus at least three ways of interpreting the phrase. (1) b' n'm could be in construct with gbt, literally "Gbt of the patrol of N'm", meaning that Gbt was a member of N'm's patrol; or (2) b' n'm could be in apposition to gbt, i.e. meaning "Gbt, N'm's messenger"; or (3) b' could be a participial circumstance clause referring to gbt, followed by an adverbial accusative n'm, thus equivalent to an Arabic ba'at na'am meaning literally "sent out with regard to the pasturing animals", i.e. "who was sent out [to look after] the pasturing animals". Of these, we would suggest that (1) is probably the most likely. [Commentary adapted from Macdonald 2005: 123-126, by kind permission of Brill, Leiden]

Al-Namārah itself is an “island” in a basin at the confluence of the Wādī al-Ṣawt and the Wādī al-Shām. The island rises to a considerable height above the wadi bed. On it’s top are the ruins of a Roman fort, the outlines of which, and the square north-east and south-west towers, can still be made out. However, much of the masonry has been reused to build a mediaeval mausoleum, including a lintel with an unfinished Greek inscription mentioning Marcus Aurelius (Waddington 1870: no. 2264) and stone doors. There are many Sāfāītīc, Greek and two Latin graffito on the slopes of the island and the banks of the wadi. In antiquity, there were small dams, cisterns, wells and diversion channels to trap the water and to lead it to nearby fields, see Macdonald 2009.

Provenance:

Unknown, possibly al-Namârah area (Grimme 1929:123). Al-Suwaydah or Rif Dimashq, Jordan.

Al-Namârah itselfs an "island" in a basin at the confluence of the Wādî al-Šawṭ and the Wādî al-Šām. The island rises to a considerable height above the wadi bed. On its top are the ruins of a Roman fort the outlines of which, and the square north-east and south-west towers, can still be made out. However, much of the masonry has been reused to build a mediaeval mausoleum, including a lintel with an unfinished Greek inscription mentioning Marcus Aurelius (Waddington 1870: no. 2264) and stone doors. There are many Safaitic, Greek and two Latin graffiti on the slopes of the island and the banks of the wadi. In antiquity, there were small dams, cisterns, wells and diversion channels to trap the water and to lead it to nearby fields, see Macdonald 2009.

lsms³{g}rm

By (s³ms¹grm)

Apparatus Criticus:
CGSP 5:1 (f)m(s³) x²km l gm "di (Fm²s³) s³km dei Gm" MCAM: the last three letters should be read as a separate text; the text could be read as Hismaic "l s³ms¹grm" but the s³ has the Safaitic form and it seems most likely that the third letter should be emended and either "s³ms¹ṣrm" or "s³ms¹ʾrm" read for the name.

Commentary:
For the last three letters read by CGSP see CGSP 5.1. It seems most likely that the text should be read as s³ms¹ṣrm as zig-zag s³’s occasionally occur in Hismaic. See also CGSP 7.1.

Provenance:
Column 2, unspecified region, unspecified country.

By {Md}

Apparatus Criticus:
CGSP 5: see under CGSP 5 MCAM: read l m(d) where the has a Hismaic form.

Commentary:
The above letters are read by the edition as the end of CGSP 5. The outer curve of the m is very doubtful in the photograph and it is possible the letter should be read as a f. If the last letter is a d then second backward hook is very uncertain. It seems possible that the letter could be a y although the line is placed on the side of the loop rather than in a central position which is more usual.

Commentary:
It looks as though the w has been added to. All that is visible of the eighth letter are two angled lines and there does not appear to enough room under the damage for a line. The letter read as a b is angular with one arm curled in a hook. The ḥ is rather uncertain as it is not entirely clear that the third line is attached to the other two. The letter before the final one is very doubtful.

Commentary:
The first letter of the sixth name and the following n from the photograph seem to be a h. lʾt could be lʾnt there is space for the n and an abrasion between the ṣ and t. There is no preposition after sʾlm and it is most likely that ʾl ṣwʾy ʾkr is a continuation of the genealogy rather than the indirect object of the prayer.

Apparatus Criticus:
JRWH p. 509: bwrṯ - by deceit for b- ṣrw.

Commentary:
The stone was bought in Damascus. It has been missing from the museum for many years and could not be found at the time the objects in the museum were given new accession numbers. It seems possible that in the final phrase the author made a mistake and wrote ḏ- ṭḥ instead of ḏ- ṭḥ. But this is only a suggestion. The final ṭ read by Ryckmans is not visible on the photograph. There is a thin line, but nothing crossing it, and it may well be extraneous to the inscription. The inscription is in the so-called "square script".

By Ḥbbt daughter of ṣlmw and she longed for Nmn

Apparatus Criticus:
RyDamas 5537: ṣlm for ṣlmw

Commentary:
The inscription is carved round the edge of a shallow limestone tripod platter. There are several interesting aspects to this inscription. Firstly, it is carved by a woman, as are several of the inscriptions on stone vessels. Secondly, the spelling of the name ṣlmw is very unusual in Safaitic. Thirdly, the shapes of the letters sʾ and sʾ are strange, particularly the latter. In many of these inscriptions on stone vessels the letters appear to be a mixture of Safaitic and Hismaic forms. Here the sʾ is closer to Hismaic, though it is rather longer than is normal in that script, and the hook at one end is unexpected, though it occurs in the name rsʾ in the Hismaic inscription WTI 11. On the other hand, the first letter of the author’s name is more likely to be a h (as in Safaitic) than a t (as in Hismaic).

Commentary:
The stone is broken at the beginning. It is possible that the first letter which remains should be read as k, compare the "fork" of the k in 'bdmlk. it is also possible that y should be restored after the s² t as in AKSD. It seems likely that [s²]wq 'l- grr "he longed for Grr" should be restored before the prayer. The first letter of the name is noticeably larger than the ' in 'bdmlk and s² and is probably a g, as is the last letter of the lineage name, ntg, while the two letters which follow are identical and almost certainly r's (compare the r in ds²r which is identical, as against the b's of the bn's which are much more open).

Commentary:

Apparatus Criticus:
AKSJ: $w \cdot h^b \cdot t \cdot b^n \cdot m_1 \cdot k \cdot b^n \cdot y_1 \cdot m$ for $w \cdot h^b \cdot t \cdot b^n \cdot m_1 \cdot k \cdot b^n \cdot y_1 \cdot m$.

Commentary:
The inscription is carved on a limestone bowl with short handles at the base and (broken off) at the rim: diameter at the rim is 16 cms, at the base is 12 cms, and it is 9.5 cms high. The text is carved around the lower part of the outer face, running from the left side of the lower handle all round the bowl ending at the right side of the handle. The correct position of $b^n \cdot y_1 \cdot m$ is difficult to judge since it is carved at right angles to the rest of the text below the $t$ of $h^b \cdot t$. It could either be the father of $h^b \cdot t$ which the author had omitted and then added, or it could be the father of $m_1 \cdot k$ whose name was already up against the handle, with the space immediately below possibly already occupied by AKSJ 1.5.2.

Commentary:

The inscription is carved on a limestone bowl with short handles at the base and (broken off) at the rim: diameter at the rim is 16 cms, at the base is 12 cms, and it is 9.5 cms high. The inscription runs from the right of the lower handle upwards and across the scar where the upper handle had been and along the top of the outer face of the bowl. It is thus clear that it was carved after the upper handle had broken off which suggests that it may have been treated as a "waste product" which could be used for graffiti.

Bought in Jordan by Henry Field from Dr Shuwayḥat who said it came from 1 mile east of H5/Al-Ṣafāwī (though, like 158703, it has a label saying “474/21”). From its contents it is virtually certain that it came from the Cairn of Haniʿ, some 13 km east of H5/Al-Ṣafāwī. It entered the museum on 19th October 1935.

Commentary:
A tracing found among Gerald Lankester Harding’s papers. There is no indication of its provenance. For the interpretation of ‘mt compare Classical Arabic \textit{amata} “he directed his course to” (Lane 95c) and for \textit{s²r} compare Classical Arabic \textit{šaʿar} “luxuriant or abundant or dense trees” or \textit{šiʿār} “trees in a land that is soft and depressed between two eminences where people alight, such as is termed \textit{dahnā}’ and the like, warming themselves thereby in winter and shading themselves thereby in summer” (Lane 1561a). Otherwise ‘mt might be interpreted on the basis of Classical Arabic \textit{amata} “he calculated (Lane 94c) and h-s²r as al-šiʿār “Sirius”, the star dominating the very hottest part of the season of \textit{qyz} which is followed by Suhayl the harbinger of the October rains. The antepenultimate letter could be \textit{f}.

l bny bn bny bn ‘([‘]š’)d w fks¹ h- nz(r)

By Bny son of Bny son of (‘š’d) and he fks¹ the (one on the look-out)

Commentary:
The sentence following the genealogy is increasingly difficult to interpret. The root fks¹ does not occur in Semitic, Arabic fqs¹, for which a bi-form fqs is also attested, means "to die" or "to break". The irregular correspondence between emphatic and emphatic consonants across Semitic languages is not unknown and, since fks¹ does not occur anywhere else, we can tentatively connect it with Arabic fqs. The existence of an irregular bi-form in Arabic may support our connection. The last letter of the following word should be restored as an r, since there are no roots with n as C1 and z as C2. This produces a rather curious translation: "and he killed the one on the look-out". An other interpretation maintains the connection. between Safaitic fks1 and Arabic fqs, but parses the following word as hn-zr. Zr can be connected to Arabic žirr ‘flint’, in which case, we would translate the sentence as: "and he broke (struck?) the flint”. This translation requires us to assume that the author of this text spoke a hn-dialect. Statistically speaking this is unlikely since the vast majority of texts exhibit only h-, but given that the Arabic ‘l occurs, as well as the assimilating article,’-, we cannot completely rule out the possibility of a hn-dialect in this region as well.

l ṣ’d bn s’g bn ʾs’lm w żr h- ʾs’n m- ḏ’- ʾs[1]l)y

By ʾs’d son of ʾs’l son of ʾs’lm and he lay in wait for enemies from above ʾs[1]l)y

Commentary:
The final prepositional phrase lends itself to several interpretations: (1) The wood ʾasal- in Arabic can mean "brush (plant)" or "palm thorn". If we take ʾs[1]l)y here to mean the same thing, then the author was perhaps waiting, camouflaged by the brush. Perhaps ʾs[1]l)y is a plural form, *ʾas’liyā or a fu’lay pattern, *ʾuslay. (2) Through metaphorical extension, the word ʾasal can also signify a lance(s), Arabic rimā. If we understand the Safaitic word in this way, then we have a few options for translation: a. We can take ʾs[1]l)y as a lance, with the nisba -y, and the author could be lying in wait above him: m- ḏ’- ʾs[1]l)y "above a lance". We can also translate ʾs[1]l)y as a "lancer regiment", producing: "and he lay in wait for enemies above a lance regiment" b. We can assume that this is an ‘l dialect rather than a h-dialect and parse the sentence as m- ḏ’- ʾs[1]l)y, "he lay in wait for enemies with the lance" or perhaps "with the lance". c. We can treat ʾs[1]l)y as a toponym, perhaps a component of ʾl’s[1]l)y "the ‘s[1]l heights". The word ʾs[1]l occurs in a familiar toponym in Saudi Arabia, west of Riyadh, ma’al. In this case, we have "he lay in wait for enemies from atop ʾs[1]l’y or from ʾs[1]l)y heights". The l of this word has a bit of damage in the middle that resembles an attempt at a loop. It is possible that the author intended a d, erred, and did not bother redoing it. If we restore a d here, we produce ʾs[1]l)y, which, among other things, could mean two or more (military) troops, following the meaning of ʾs’d in OSA. Less likely, it could mean two lions. In this case, we can translate: "he lay in wait for enemies above two troops".

The root bhl occurs in OSA and Ethiopic meaning "to speak", which hardly fits the context of this inscription. Arabic bahala means "to pronounce a curse" and the Gt stem ibahlá "to beseech, implore"; Akkadian baʾālu also means "to beseech or pray". In NWS, the root means "to frighten," Hebrew nibḥāl "be frightened"; Aramaicbihel "frighten". The NWS "be frightened" and Akkadian "pray" fit the context of this inscription best but we are unable to determine which one is to be preferred.

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 685: w‘l- dlwn w ‘l‘qrb for w ‘l- {g’h n}w ‘l- ‘qrb; rğm mny for rğmn mny.

Commentary:
The first letter of the second name after wgm is a circle with a dot in the middle. It is possible that the dot is incidental as there are other similar dots on the rock surface. The reading of w‘l‘qrb by the editor is dittography. The author of the inscription has left a w out after the name km n. The reading rğmn is clear in the photograph. The edition says that this inscription is on the same stone as HaNS 687 and 688 but the latter must be a mistake for 686.

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 5: translation. “and he sought refuge” (wa lāʾa)

Commentary:
There are two loop shapes before the ḍ which are inked in in the copy. The first is smaller than the second. The inscription is surrounded by a cartouche. Safaitic sʾyʾ could be connected to Arabic šāʾ “to will, want, intend”. The formula of this inscription could be compared to the common PN w tsʾwq “PN and he was in a state of longing”.

HaNSB 15 (HaNS 15)

l ṛn bn ḏr bn ḥbb — (f) h-ʾgnmt

By ṛn son of ḏr son of ḥbb — (f) the booty

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 15: "dry" for "(k)b(r)", dbr or ddb for (k)b(r)
Commentary:
It is possible the letter read as a f should be read as a s². The space between hbb and (f) does not appear to be large enough to permit a verb, but the author could have squeezed it in. The h following (f) could be one of two things: (1) a 3ms clitic pronoun, "PN, Verb-him booty" or (2) the definite article/demonstrative, yielding "PN VERBed the/this booty." The absence of a deity name tips the scale slightly in favor of the latter interpretation.

HaNSB 16 (HaNS 16)

---- wʾght h- sʾmy kll h- sʾnt

---- and the sky was unable [to produce rain] this entire year

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 16: translation "the sky did not produce rain this entire year" (lam tamṭur al-samāʾu kulla ḥāḍihi īl-sanah).

Commentary:
In Arabic, as in other Semitic languages, the quantifier "kull, when followed by a definite singular noun, can refer to the entirety of a category or span of time, kullu ī-nāsi “all mankind”; kullu ī-yawmi "the whole day" (Wright, Grammar of the Arabic Language, vol. 2, §82.c,d). Thus, it is equally possible to read the h/ as h-, that is, as a definite article, in this context. Either way, the semantic difference, if there really is one, would be negligible.

I ṣrmt bn qds¹ w tdym ntl

By Ṣrmt son of Qds¹ and he was always on the move

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 56: translation "and he drank water [which was stored in] the ostrich eggs" (wa šariba ʾl-māʾa [allaḏī ḥuzzina fi] bayḍīʾl-nāʾāmī).

Commentary:
τdym could more plausibly be connected to Arabic dāʿima "to remain, persist," with the regular confusion of w and y in weak roots, which would equate it with Classical Arabic dāʾīm-an 'always'. This seems more natural than the translation proposed by the edition, "to drink rain-water that was produced by a storm without thunder and lightning." The primary sense of ntl in Arabic is to "advance, move forward, make progress," equivalent to taqaddam. HaNSB appeals to a secondary usage of this term which refers specifically to an ostrich egg that has been filled with water and buried in the wilderness.

lḏʾ bn ḍʿzn w ʿgz h- šʾmy
By ḍʾl son of ḍʿz and the sky withheld [it i.e. the rain]

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 119: “and the rain did not come down” (wa lam yanzil al-maṭar).

Commentary:
The masculine concord between the verb and the subject h- šʾmy in this inscription vs. feminine concord in HaNSB 62 (ʾgdʾ h- šʾm) invites comparison with the double gender (masc/fem) of the Classical Arabic cognate samāʾ’. Alternatively, Saf šʾmy could represent a singular and a plural form which were distinguished only by their vocalizations. It is worth comparing this expression with šʾnt ḥgz -h bʾlsʾ mn in C 1240, 3261 (= Mu 93), LP 722, H 506, which seems to mean “the year Bʾlsʾ mn withheld it [i.e. the rain]”.

By Ṣḥṭ son of Ṁḥr is the young she-camel and he pastured the camels with large humps.

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 145: translation of h- ṣḥṭ "the side of the mountain"

Commentary:
We connect ṣḥṭ to Arabic ṣuṭṭāḥ pl. ṣuṭṭāḥ "camels with large humps" or, it could possibly be a sound plural of sāḥī "camel, ewe, or goat whose milk is drying up" (Lane 1696a). This translation is supported by the fact that the inscription appears along with an drawing of a camel.

l tm bn ʾd bn tm bn sḥl bn tn bn mfn ṣ qṣṣ

By Tm son of Ṣʿd son of Tm son of Sʿḥl son of Tm son of Mfn and he tracked

Commentary:
The word qṣṣ can be interpreted in two ways. The first is as a verb in the suffix conjugation, producing the preterite "and he tracked", and the second is as an active participle ʾqāṣṣ or ṣqāṣṣ (D-stem), "and he is tracking." We favor the latter reading, as it is unlikely that the author paused to write this inscription in the process of tracking an animal. One is tempted to read the suffix conjugation as a past imperfect "and he was tracking", but the continuous aspect is not attested for the suffix conjugation in any Semitic language. More evidence is therefore required to posit such a development in Safaitic.

Commentary:
tʿmr h- sḥṣ. The noun sḥṣ appears relatively frequently in Safaitic with the meaning "dearth of milk, want of milk" and, on this basis, HaNSB’s translation as "fat" cannot be accepted. The root ʿmr is common Semitic, but its sense varies from language to language. In Akkadian, it means "to see", in Hebrew "to speak", and in Arabic, most commonly "to command". The Lisān, however, records an interesting marginal usage, with the intransitive pattern fāʿila, attributed to the "ʿarab": ʿamira banū fulān, ayy kaṭurū ʾThe Banū Fulān increased in number, became abundant'. The preformative t- in the Safaitic verb indicates that it too is intransitive, suggesting a connection between the two. Thus, we translate tʿmr as "become abundant or widespread", like HaNSB, but h- s²ḥṣ as "want of milk" with the generic article.

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 170: translation of w ẓl m ẓl sʾʾr "and he built a shelter over one who remained sick" (wa banā ẓallaḥ ʿalā man baqiya marīdan)

Commentary:
In Classical Arabic the root sʾʾr means "to remain" in the sense of "to be left over" (as of food after a meal, or change after a purchase). However, the active participle, sʾʾr "the rest, the remainder" is also used of people (Lane 1282 c). In contexts where sʾʾr refers to the inscription (usually in opposition to ʿwr) it means "to leave untouched” but in contexts where it refers to people it means “remain”. LP 305’s “remain safe” is stretching the meaning slightly, but the reference is in contrast to ẓlln “those who are lost, i.e. dead”. The root ẓll should be connected to Arabic “to stay, remain”. We take mẓl as an adverb “perpetually” (as in WH 180), and connect s¹ʾ to Arabic s¹āʾ “to be bad, sad”.

HaNSB 190 (HaNS 190)

l ‘dr bn w----s¹ w tw(r) h-ṣḥt
By ‘dr son of W----s¹ and {he returned} with the camels with large humps

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 190: translation of w tw(r) h-ṣḥt "and returned to the side of the mountain (wa ’āda {ʾilā) šafḥ al-jabal"

Commentary:
Safaitic twr could be connected with Arabic tāra, Lane 322b: “it ran or flowed”; tawwarahu “he returned to him, it, time after time”; ʿatāra - “he repeated it or did it again time after time”. From other inscriptions, it seems best to connect Safaitic šḥt specifically with the Arabic sufḥā, pl sufḥāt “camels whose humps have become large, so that the hump of the she-camel occupies the whole of her back” Lane 1696a, or “a she-camel, ewe or she-goat whose milk is going away: or a she-camel that has lost her young one, whose milk has gone”, Lane 1696a-b. The second r does not have hooks.

l hn` bn wrd bn s̱ḥyt bn s` w s̱r q m-ḥrn b-’bl-h s̱r b-´r’y y’m(r) f h b’ls’mn ḥyṛt w s̱lm w ‘wr m ‘wṛ

By Hn` son of Wrd son of S̱ḥyt son of S̱ and he migrated to the inner desert from the Ḥrn with his camels [to] the herbage at the pools of Y’mr and so 0 B’ls’mn [grant] abundance and security and blind whoever scratches out [the inscription]

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 197: trans. w s̱r q m-ḥrn b-’bl-h s̱r b-´r’y y’m(r) "and he faced east from Ḥawrān on his camel (moving away from) the snow storms and the abundant rains when he saw y’mr"

Commentary:
The sentence w s̱r q m-ḥrn b-’bl-h s̱r b-´r’y y’m(r) requires further discussion. Littmann (LP pp. 116–117) points out that this word frequently appears before names of places, which leads him to connect it with the root RYW "to water." If this is correct, then the Safaitic form, r’y, reflects an active participial derivation, perhaps rā’y (cf. Arabic QWL "to speak qā’l"). The intransitive verb rawiya (<rāwiya) means "be watered" in Ga’az (Leslau 1987:478). The active participle of the intransitive verb *rawiya , rā’y, would literally mean "being watered", presumably referring to the area. The pattern CĀG is used in the derivation of some toponyms in Arabic, ṣā’ti “coast”, or sāḥil. Alternatively, one can connect this word to the root RY "to see", and assume that it refers to a looking point. Our translation also requires a preposition, l, following ’bl, which is seemingly missing from the text. The solution to this problem could provide more evidence for the absence of final short vowels in Safaitic. First, we would re-parse this phrase as: s̱r q m-ḥrn b-’bl-h s̱r, with the ḥ as the definitive article of s̱r rather than a 3ms suffix pronoun. The article is often omitted in phrases containing the verb s̱r (ex. NST 5: w s̱r q b-`d’n f h gd ’wd s̱lm), even when the sense is clearly definite; we argue that the word ’bl here follows the same pattern. Next, one should recall that HaNSB attests sandhi at word boundaries, with the assimilation of the 3ms -ḥ and a following definite article, l-ḥ h y ʾl ḥa-hayyāt. In principle, a word final l- should assimilate to a word initial l-, in the same way, and this is likely the reason for the curious absence of the preposition. With these changes, we have: w s̱r q m-ḥrn b- ’bl-h s̱r b-´r’y y’m(r) *wa’ as’raq m-ḥrn bi-’bil-li ha-s̱a’ār bi-rā’iyV y’mr And he migrated to the inner desert from Ḥrn to the herbage at the pools of Y’mr

l ṭhm bn ḥ(l)m h- gml w h lt ḍ y’wr h- ḥṭṭ

By Ṭhm son of Ḥ(l)m is the camel and O Lt blind him who effaces the carving

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 213: "ḥ(l)m" for "ḥ(l)m".

Commentary:
The letter read as l in the second name is rather short and it is possible it should be read as a n. There is a line after the g which is probably a continuation of the curve of the b of bn which has not been joined up in the copy.

Provenance:
Cairn 6, unspecified region, unspecified country.

Commentary:
It looks as though the copy after the patronym could be very doubtful.

HaNSB 215: translation of w rʿy h - rmt h - 'b}{l} "and the camels were pastured by the trees" (wa raʿat al-ʾihl 'l-rmth (al-ṣāğer)

Commentary:
The last two letters are very doubtful. The ḡ read by the edition can equally be read as ṣ, which would connect this word to Arabic rummah "the last remains of herbage" Lane 1151b.

By Mṣrm son of Mlk son of S¹ṣr son of Ṣb son of Mlk and he was watching the rain-clouds and so O Bʾls¹mn [grant] deliverance and security

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 216: ṣl for ṣb, and translation of ḥṣy h- ḫṣy df and he was on the look out for the torrential rains" (wa rāqaʾa 'l-maṭār al-ġazīrah).
Commentary:
Safaḥīf could be connected to Arabic ḥasāf in the sense of a "source of water" or (also hisf and ḥasif) "clouds that have arisen in the west bearing much water" (Lane 738c). Less likely is a connection with Arabic ḥusāf, "lunar eclipse." The second letter of the fourth name is more like a b than a l.

By Ḏḥ son of Nṛ son of Ḥṛb son of Ḏḥ son of Ḥmt son of Ḥmyn and he grieved for Sʾlm and for Čyṛ and for ʾdq and for ʾwgn and for Ḍʾl and for Ḥny and for Sʾny and he was depressed and he drove the camels from the Ḥrn on account of snow at the pools of Ngʾm.

Apparatus Criticus:

HaNS 218: "ḵšt" for "ḵḥb"; trans. from "w ngʾsʾ" and he drove the camels from Ḥwrn because of the snow when he saw ʿṣ-ṭurayyā”

Commentary:
The penultimate letter of the fifth name is more like a b than a r. We connect Safaitic ngs² to Arabic nāgaša “he collected together [camels etc.] after a state of dispersion”; “he drove vehemently” Lane 2771 b. Ngm occurs as a place name in CSA 2.1, SIJ 997, WH 3053. The etymology of Safaitic ngm is probably connected with Arabic nāqin “herbage”, Lisān: al-naqīn min al-nabāt: kull m a nabata ʿalā ʿl-ard (the naqīn of plants: all that has grown on the face of the earth).

ty

Byʾrṃ son of Mgyr son of Msʾk son of ʾmd son of (Mlk) and he pastured the (goats) and so O Sʾʔhm [grant] security and abundance
Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 220: 'kfn for 'r}fn; gmd for 'md; mlk for m{l}{k}; translation of mgdt "fodder" (kala'a).

Commentary:
The second letter of the first name and the third letter of the fifth name are similar in shape, both are a curve with a short hook and a longer hook extended beyond the back of the curve at the other end. It would be unusual to have k's of this shape and it seems most likely that in the first case the author has for some reason extended one arm of a letter r and in the second case the copyist has made a mistake by giving the letter a second shorter arm where if the letter is a k there is usually no arm at all. The copy of the second letter of the fifth name has indications that there might be an elongated loop attached to the line. There is shading over the z and y of the word which according to the commentary have been damaged are restored on the basis of the context.

HaNS 248: l njr bn w[t][b][t]

Commentary:
The letter read as a ẓ by the edition is turned 90° and it seems more likely it should be read as the incomplete loop of a g. Whilst it is possible that the patronym that occurs in HaNS 247 should be read here there is not enough evidence for it to be restored.

By Lhb son of {Dḥnn} are the two young she-camels

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 264: dḥlīl for dh(n)(n)

Commentary:
The last two letters of the second name are rather long and it is possible they should be read as l’s. The second l of dḥl(l) (l) should probably be taken as an h. The copyist may have missed the side-stroke. The author of this text likely added another camel to the original drawing of HaNSB 263, and claimed ownership of them both.

By Qdm son of Tbn and he pastured the valley Rṭt

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 273: translation of rṭt "he was ill, weak" (huwa marīḍ aw ḍaʿīf al-quwwah).

Commentary:
The inscription is surrounded by a cartouche. The edition’s interpretation of rṭt as a verb is unlikely as we would expect a conjunction before it. It is more likely that it is the name of a particular valley, perhaps connected to the root WRṬ "to inherit", the māṣdar of which might have been rīṭāt, similar to sinah "slumber" from the root WṢL and ṣifā’ "description, adjective" from the root WŠF.

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 287: ‘[l][y] for ‘----

Commentary:
There is no justification from the copy for the restoration of the patronym as ʿly in HaNSB. The last part of the inscription is very doubtful. The l, second h, second n, and the line of the q are all written in thinner strokes than the other letters of the inscription. There is, however, a drawing of a camel accompanying this inscription, suggesting that the translation is correct. The absence of the article on nqt is likely due to assimilation, see the commentary of HaNSB 39.

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 303: Translation of narrative "and he arrived from Ngd or from Gd" (wa waṣala min naḏ āw min ḡād).
Commentary:

Ngd occurs in other Safaitic texts and that a journey from Najd (now in Saudi Arabia) to the harra of northeastern Jordan was perfectly possible. MCAM points out that specific regions such as "The Ruhbah" (modern al-ruh bah), "The Hawrān" (modern al-hawrān), and the inner desert (mdbr) do not take the definite article in Safaitic (rḥt, ḥrn, mdbr), hence one might expect the region called "The Nejd" to appear as ngd in Safaitic, and "high ground" to be h- ngd just as h-/ rḥt refers to any shallow depression where water collects and the herbage is rich, rather than the region called Rḥbt (modern al-Ruhbah) North Arabian Epigraphic Notes — I" (Arabian Archaeology and Epigraphy 3, 1992: 23-43).

Apparatus Criticus:

HaNSB 304: w ḥf l- sʾlḥ h- m b- nḥt for w ḥf l- sʾlḥ -h m- ʾl ṣḥt; translation: "and he cast his spear and he struck with his sword and he penetrated all of his armor, so 0 Gdʾḏ [grant] and security and compensation for his two weapons from the wells" (wa ramā bī-rumḥ-hi wa waḥţāa bī-sayḥ-hī fa- maraqā [min] kull ʾrūʾ-hi, fa-yā Gdʾwḏ ʾl ṣḥmā w sa-lāmān, waʾ aʿbqī lī-li maʾnā nāḡā maʾān mināʾ l-ʾsbrār, wa ʾdī Illāʾ yattalīf [al-naqṣ].

Commentary:

Safaitic rmy is certainly connected to Arabic ramā “to throw.” Unlike Arabic, however, its direct object, rmḥ (=Arabic rūmḥ “lance, spear”), is introduced with b-. The words ḥrz does not have any suitable Semitic cognates, but from the context, its meaning "to strike", is rather clear. Likewise, mṛq does not find a clear Arabic cognate (there it means "to let pass"). It could be read as "break" from the context; indeed, the other two occurrences of sʾlḥ in Safaitic (KRS 1023; KRS 1039) are accompanied by the word kṣʾr “to break” (cf. Arabic kasara). On the other hand, one can connect it to Syriac maraq “rub off rust”, which is also used metaphorically to mean "to purify." In this case, the author might have intended a rather poetic statement, "and he was purified of his bonds." Safaitic sʾlḥ is connected to the same root in Arabic meaning "weapon" ṣilāḥ. If the author was referring to the two aforementioned weapons, it should be read as a dual in the construct state, which would not be reflected in the orthography: *sʾlāḥay-hu "his two weapons." On the other hand, the author might have been carrying more weapons, which were confiscated from him and not mentioned in the inscription. In this case, sʾlḥ would represent an internal plural, perhaps similar to sulūh, which is a variant plural of sʾlāḥ in Arabic. Safaitic ḥf is connected to Arabic ḥal.” compensation” (Lane 796b). In this case, Safaitic ḥalāfa min would be mean compensation from rather than compensation for, as it does in Arabic. It is also worth noting that the D-stem (form I) and C-stem (form IV) of this root are used in prayers to God to give someone something to replace something that has been lost, thus: ḥalāfa ḥālā la-ka bi-hayn and ḥalāfa la-ka ḥayran "May God give you good in the place of that which has gone from thee" and ḥalāfa lāhū la-ka māla-ka "May God replace to thee thy property" (Lane 792c). Note also that in Bedouin dialects of central Arabia tahṣilaf bi- means "to take as compensation for a loss" (S.A. Sowayan, The Arabic Oral Historical Narrative: An Ethnographic and Linguistic Analysis (Wiesbaden, 1992: 384).

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSB 310: l s¹ʿdlh w l-ḥ- frs¹ w l-ḥ- bkrt; trans. wa lahu ʾafrās wa lahu ʾabkār.

Commentary:
It seems most likely that the ʾ is a form of the article and not part of a plural form. There is only one horse in the drawing and although there are two camels if they were both mentioned then it is most likely that the dual form would have been used. In addition 'bkrt would be an unlikely plural form for the noun bkrt. This provides unambiguous evidence for an 'article, rather than ʾl with assimilation of the coda to coronals. An invariable ʾarticle occurs in some contemporary dialects of Arabic in the Yemen. For other examples of the use of ʾ for the definite article see HaNSB 312-313, 315-316. Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 314: translation of end "and he arrived (at the place) and his camel was thirsty" (waṣala (al-makān) wa qad ′aṭāṣat bakaratuhu).

Commentary:
The preposition bi- is taken as an instrumental, 'ty b- "he came by means of". Gender concord between subject and verb is well attested in Safaitic and there are no examples yet of feminine singular concord with an inanimate plural. Either way, such an alignment cannot explain the masculine singular concord of the verb lwb with a feminine singular subject, bkrt. It is more likely that the verb here refers to the author and the preposition b- is not reflected in the orthography, for the same reasons outlined in the commentary of HaNSB 197 and HaNSB 39. HaNSB 320: l s¹hr w byt w r’y b- nm 'ws¹; trans: "and he camped [at this place] and he pastured in the vegetation with small leaves and soft spines (=al-nîm) which pertain to 'ws¹" (wa bayyata (fi ḥadhā 'l-makān) wa ra‘ā fī nabhāt 'l-nîm al-allaḍī yâḫāṣṣu ‘aws).

Commentary:
The letter read as y in the word r’y is written to the side of the ‘ and next to it is a dot which is covered by scratching in the copy. Safaitic nm could be connected with Arabic namm "to spread its odour, and ‘ws¹ to Arabic ās, meaning myrtle (Lane 125b), which has a very strong (and pleasant) odour and grows all over the harra.

The final character has one horizontal arm. Safaitic nsʾt could be connected with Arabic našaʾa meaning "to go from place to place", which when applied to water courses means "going forth from the main water course to right and left" (Lane 2797a, s.v. nāšīṭ).

By ʿzn son of ṭf son of Yhwḥ son of ʿmr son of Qn and he escaped from Ḥrn wounded

Commentary:
The order of the letters suggests that the third name should be read yhwḥ. There is no n after the third m in the copy. We take mks₁ as a passive D-participle. The Arabic root ks₁ signifies a kind of striking with the hand or foot on the rear of a man. This is obviously the result of semantic narrowing and it is reasonable to posit that the term referred more generally to hitting in former times.

Commentary:
There is a cartouche surrounding this inscription and HaNS 347-348 and 350. ʿbl here most likely refers to the city of Abila and its territory. C 2473 [Dn 82] reads l N w ḡmd ḡl f rdf m ḡlʿd which I would translate as “and he stayed [see Lane 2900a] in Abila and then returned from Gilead.” For Abila see Annual of the Department of Antiquities of Jordan 41, 1997: 303. Gilead stretched from the Arnon in the south to Bashan in the north, and bordered on the desert on its east, (see for instance the Anchor Bible Dictionary (New York, 1992: iiii, 1020 s.v. Gilead). Gilead is also mentioned in KRS 15.

By ḡbṣ son of ḏr son of Kʾmh son of ḏr son of ḡwb son of Mʾn son of ʿz O ṭḏy [grant] booty from the territory of enemies so O ṭḏy blind whoever erases [the inscription]

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNS 352: translation of prayer: ... from H gr (tribe), the enemy (“min h gr, al-ʿadw w w h”).

Commentary:
There is a cartouche surrounding the inscription. S a f a i t i c h gr can be connected with O S A h gr “city”; Gāʾz ḡ ḡr “region, city, village, homeland, etc” (L e s l a u 1987:216). The exact sense of the word is not clear from the context so we have chosen the neutral term “territory”. It is also possible to read the word as an internal plural, “territories”.

By ḏb and he camped near a permanent source of water and so O Lt and O Ds²nr [grant] blood-money [vengeance] and security

Commentary:
There is a dot in the copy between the s² and r of the second divine name and it is possible that it is extraneous and the name should be read as ds²r however the same letters occur in HaNS 363 where the reading is clear on the photograph. Both texts have zig-zag s²’s and should probably be classed as “Mixed” although in this inscription there are no other diagnostic letters. The word ġrt is likely a defective spelling of the more common ġyrt “blood-money [vengeance].”

Commentary:
HaNSB omits the patronym and the third letter from the end, which is a short dash, and reverses the order of the last letters. The Līṣān explains that the root nṣʾ refers to the purest state of all things (al-ḥālīs min kullī šayʾ). When used concerning humans, it means “to show one’s true self”, usually referring to enmity.

By ʾmrn son of ʿdr son of ʿql and he pastured it/them while migrating with the tribe so ṭā ṭāʾī ṭā ṭāʾī [grant] torrential rains

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSC: ṭāʾī h- nṣʾ for ṭāʾī h nṣʾ; translation of h- nṣʾ "he pastured, moving from place to place" (mutanaqilān min makān lā lā makān).

Commentary:
HaNSC takes nṣʾ as a circumstantial accusative introduced by the definite article. This seems unlikely, as circumstantial accusatives may be defined by a pronominal suffix but never the article. It is possible that the ṭāʾī could be read as a 3rd person pronominal suffix, "he pastured it/them", without an expressed antecedent. The antecedent would have been obvious to the author, who might not have felt the need to write out explicitly what or where he was pasturing. This is in line with the syntax of similar inscriptions, e.g.: KRS 2526: w ṭāʾī h-ʾrd nṣʾ KRS 2568: w ṭāʾī h-ʾbl h-ʾsʾ q nṣʾ If the author was referring to his animals, it would imply that non-human plurals took feminine singular concord, at least with pronouns. The edition connects Safaitic ṭtwf to the Arabic noun ṭūfān "torrential rains", but it is equally possible to appeal to the general sense of the root ṭWF "to go around, circumambulate" and translate the word as “[safe] return.” Until more examples are attested, it will remain unclear as to which sense is to be preferred.

By Ys²kr son of ’mr and he awaited fate

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSC: Translation of tẓr mny “and he awaited death” (wa-nṭaza mawtan)

Commentary:
Safaitic mny is cognate with Arabic manan "fate, death". The translation "death" may be too precise, and we have no evidence that the author was mortally injured or ill. GMHK has suggested that authors who used this formula were simply affirming their calm acceptance of whatever fate may bring them.

By Hsʳ r son of Kddh the Tmn-ite and he was on a raid

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSC: Translation of h- tmny "the Teymanite" (al-taymāniyy)

Commentary:
The nisba tmny occurs once in LP 1195. The edition connects it to the city of Taymā', and translates it as "the Teymanite". One could also connect the nisba to timan,"the distant regions of Yemen." The Lisān states the following: and if their origins were the Timan (the distant regions of Yemen), then they said timaniyy (wa iḍā nasābū ilā 'l-timan (ʾulūq al-yaman), la qālū timaniyy). Thus, the nisba tmny could also be translated as "the Yemenite".

l ʿdnt bn ‘bd w rʿy h----b fn s²d-h r&w w ‘kl-h r&w rʿy bql ntl

By ʿdnt son of ‘bd and he pastured (h --- b) so may R&w aid him and may R&w provide him with nourishment [and] he pastured spring herbage while on the move

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSC: s‘d-h r&w for s²d-h r&w w ‘kl-h r&w rʿy; translation: "so help, O R&w, and he ate dates and pastured herbage which was of varying lengths" (fa-sā‘îd yā ruḍḥa wa akala al-rad w ra‘ā baqlan nātlān)

Commentary:
See HaNSB 56 on the translation of ntl. Incidentally, HaNSB, the same author as this edition, translates the ntl there as "an ostrich egg which has been filled with water and buried in the desert". Safaitic ‘kl is best read as an optative of the causative verb, Arabic ‘akkala "to feed, nourish", followed by a 3ms suffixed pronoun and the name of the deity r&w again. The conjunction w is missing following the second r&w and rʿy, but this is probably the result of word boundary sandhi, which has already been attested with h, l, and b. The underlying form is likely: *wa ʿakkīl-hu ruḍḥaw-wa rʿy bql... There is an empty space between the first h and the third b on the copy.

l w‘dl bn bdh w rʿy-h- ntl

Apparatus Criticus:
HaNSC 9: rʿy h- ntl for rʿy-h ntl "he pastured the natl" (ra‘ā ‘l-natl)

Commentary:
HaNSC 9 appeals to the phrase in the Lisān: tanātalā ‘l-nabat "(the plants) became entangled and some parts were longer than others" (lṭāfī wa sāra ba‘duhu atwil min ba‘dīhī). Obviously, the word tanātala refers to the way in which the plants have grown rather than the plants themselves so there is no way to justify the edition’s translation of ntl as herbage. It might be better to take ntl as a circumstantial accusative (see the previous inscription), and -h as a 3 person pronoun referring either to the area or the animals the author pastured. I ḳr bn nṣʾr {bn} ḫrm l- ʿsʾlly

By ḳr son of Nṣʾr {son of} ḫrm the ʿsʾl-ite

Commentary:
HaNSC connects the name ḫrm to the Arabic verb ḥarm al-ʿt to wear out, ruin; e.g. ḥarmali l-ʿaḍūz: baliyat mina l-kubr "she was worn on account of age". The final y is about three letter spaces removed from the l, which could suggest that part of the inscription has been worn away and the final word is not a nisba.

By ġt son of Bny son of Qḥs² of the lineage of ḏlf and cause the goats to give birth and (cause) the enemy (to despair) so 0 ṣḥq [grant] security

Apparatus Criticus:

HaNSC 21: qnt for (q)tnt Translation of w wld ḥ- mʿzy w qtn h- s²nʿ “and the goats gave birth and the enemy was afraid” (wa waladat al-mʿṣʿ wa ḥāfā lʿ-adw).

Commentary:

Safaitic qnt could be connected with Arabic qunūt “despair” The translation of wld as the past tense “gave birth” by the edition is unlikely as one would have to assume that a feminine singular or plural antecedent took masculine concord with the verb. There are two better ways of interpret both wld and qtn. One could take them as imperatives of the D-stem, wllid “cause to give birth” and qṭṭin “cause to despair”, or as verbal nouns in construct with their direct objects.

Carved in the Safaitic square script and boustrophedon in which line 1 runs from right-to-left and line 2 runs left-to-right but with the letters facing left. Note the Hismaic form of the ḏ. Here we have followed Al-jallad’s interpretation of ḏrk (cf. Classical Arabic ḏaruka “to be struck by misfortune”, ḏarik “poor, hungry”) taking ḏrk as an accusative of circumstance, thus /Raʿaya ḏarīka/ “he pastured suffering from scarcity”. This fits well with the pray for “abundance”

MNH p. 383 n. 481: on ways of expressing grave-markers. ʿN bn/bnt N etc. ḏ rm “By N son/daughter N and the cairn [is his/ hers].”
Commentary:
The letters y r and w have been scored over. The text is by the same author and says the same as HCH 2. The text is written in an arc following the upper edge of the face with a line running beneath it beginning under the lām auctoris and ending under the m of rgm. Within the curve of this line is an apotropaic sign of seven lines. HCH 1 was almost certainly the first text to be inscribed on this face since it occupies the best area and the other inscriptions are fitted in around it.

Apparatus Criticus:
HCH: trḥ for t[r[h]; the word is omitted from the copy on fig.3.

Commentary:
The author originally wrote an ‘ after bny presumably as the first letter of ’h -h and then realizing that he had omitted ‘l- continued the text above the y. He then drew the line of the cartouche through the ‘ in an attempt to erase it. He also appears to have written the first two letters of t[r[h] at the end of the inscription but may have left the word incomplete. There is certainly no sign of the h on the photograph and the r is at the very apex of the cartouche.

l zbd bn ḫmy w bny {Ḥ}'(l- ḭl -h hn’ tr{ḥ)}
By Zbd son of Ḫmy and he built {for} his maternal uncle {untimely dead}

Apparatus Criticus:
HCH: ‘l- for {Ḥ}’(l-) and trḥ for tr{ḥ}.

Commentary:
The first ‘l- and the ḭ of trḥ have been hammered over. Immediately after ḭl -h the author wrote an l by mistake and then wrote the { of the second ‘l- touching it. There are four vertical lines immediately after the final letter. It is possible that they were added to the three prongs of the ḭ with which they are parallel to produce an apotropaic sign.

Apparatus Criticus:
HCH: I -- h bn for I ’t(b)h bn and takes this inscription as the beginning of HCH 34. JMAA XIII p. 193: ‘trh for ’t(b)h; translation of bn "He stopped [here]."

Commentary:
The text has been scored over and is unfinished. [The mark which makes the r appear as a h on the photograph is purely superficial and is part of the over-scoring as is that which makes the l look like a h or even a b. ] The middle stroke of the fourth letter is not as deep as the rest and is probably part of the subsequent scratching. The letter is most likely a h and not r as suggested by JMAA XIII as the letter does not have distinct arms which is quite a feature of r’s in these texts. The letter before b is probably h as the stroke forming the prong seems to be as deep as the vertical line of the letter. There is a further shallower stroke which is extraneous to the reading of the letter.

Apparatus Criticus:

By Zbdy son of S²msy and he grieved for Hnʾ untimely dead and for 'bdy who was killed. So O Lṭ and Dṣ²r [grant] vengeance from ḥwlṭ

Apparatus Criticus:
JSaN 36 p. 46: hmsk for s²msⁱy ʾlt for h lt tʾr mḥwlṭ for tʾr lmn ḥwlṭ. JMAA XIII p. 41: f ʾlt for f h lt.

Commentary:
For trḥ see Macdonald North Arabian Epigraphic Notes II. [GK] There might be some justification for taking the l read after tʾr as extraneous to the text because its axis is different from that of the letters that follow. There seems to be no reason why if the l belonged the author did not continue by inscribing mn ḥwlṭ so that the letters had a vertical rather than a horizontal stance in relation to it. It is possible that the line was inscribed either prior or subsequent to the writing of the text or that the author of HCH 72 inscribed it as the back of the m felt it was too close to the letter t and so abandoned it.

Commentary:
The end of the inscription on the edge of the stone is not clear in the photograph. The ż after the y is covered by an abrasion which was possibly made by the author if he realised that he had written the letter twice. The ‘ after the second ż is doubtful as the letter is rather angular and the line that closes it leaves part of one of the other lines protruding. The bottom of the following ḥ and ḡ are broken. l rbb l{k}ʾlk{f}{r}ḥ y bny ʾl- hnʾ w wgm

By Rbb l{k}ʾlk{f}{r}ḥ y and he built for Hnʾ and he grieved

Commentary:
The available print is not good enough to check the reading of the beginning satisfactorily. A possible explanation is that the first name is rbb and then the author wrote ʾl and the first letter of his lineal name a k. He then realised that he had inscribed the letter incorrectly by placing the horizontal lines in the middle of the vertical stroke rather than at the top. He inscribed ʾl again and the correct form of the letter k. The next letter seems to be a f and the next either a r or a b. It would be unusual for someone to introduce his lineal name without using the pronoun Qaeda. Alternatively it is possible that the seventh letter should be emended to ʿ. The following letter is probably a h as read by HCH although it is slightly in shadow in the photograph and then there is a y. If the above explanation is correct then the lineal name might be kf or kf(ʿr) but it would not explain the last two letters before the w.

Apparatus Criticus:
SIAM II p. 192: the stone has been broken since the publication of HCH and what is left begins bn ṭk; k has a backward kick see ks² in MSTJ 23; the expression w ḡḥs l- ḡ ṯḥ should be added to the list in the commentary to SIAM 35 in SIAM I p. 115-116. MCAM: HCH reads the letters in the centre of the stone as the end of the inscription whereas it is clear that they belong to another text (see HCH 102.1). Indeed HCH 102 continues in a straight line on to the broken piece of the stone and there is obviously no connection between 102 and 102.1.

l ṭl bn gnl’ w tšwq {lr} - {r}ft

By ṭl son of Gnl and he longed {for} {Rft}

Apparatus Criticus:

HCH: l ṭl bn gnl’ w tšwq {lr} - {r}ft which is not shown in HCH’s copy after {lr}. The g is not entirely certain and it is possible that the name should be read as ršt. The ṭ which is read by HCH at the end belongs to HCH 23. The {lr} of {lr} is obscured by an abrasion but the restoration is certain in this context.

Commentary:

There is a rayed circle in the middle of the stone. The stone partly covered a grave cut in the soil on the southern face of the cairn in which the body of a woman was found. See HCH p. 11.

[----]lkt ḍ- ḫḍg ṭạ w ṭgm ṭ- [----] [h]n[y] [h] r-----m'----

---lkt of the lineage of ḫḍg and he grieved for ---- {built} {h}r----- m'----

Apparatus Criticus:
HCH: ---- lht ḍ- ḫḍg ṭạ w ṭgm ṭ- bny ḫr ----- m'----; suggests restoring the end as bny ḫ- ṭgm ṭ- "built the cairn for ----".

Commentary:
The stone is broken in several places and two pieces have been joined together but the rest is missing. The tops of the first two letters following the ṭ are broken and the above is only one of the alternative ways in which they might be restored. There is sufficient room for another letter between the ḫ and the m and there are traces of letters following the ṭ. There appear to be further letters in the middle of the stone as well.

There is only a copy of the inscription but there is a clear ' between the l and h of the second name. Commentary:
The second letter of the third name is two vertical lines with a horizontal going across the top which does not resemble the shape of any letter in the Safaitic alphabet. l ḡṭ bn ḡnʾ d- lʾmrʾ w ts²wq l- klʾ s²r ṣdq
By ʿṣ son of Hn’ of the lineage of ‘mr̥t and he longed for all the righteous kinsmen

Apparatus Criticus:
HCH: the last part ts²wq l- kll ‘ṣdq[nh] w dbq “and he longed for every acquaintance among his friends and he was attached to them”. MAA XII p. 122-123: ts²wq l kl̄ḡ gṣ l- dbq “he longed for kl̄g who deceived”. JSaN 33 p.45: “dbq at the end cannot be translated for at least 3 letters are missing in the context which immediately precedes the word”. MNM p. 351: [w] ts²wq l- kll’s²r sdq “et il désirait (la présence de) tous ses bons amis”. MTB p.43: as HCH then ts²wq l- kll’r sdq[n] [---] dbq “il se sent ému (en songeant) aux cendres de tous les justes[s qu’on peut?] toucher”. H unpub.: read kll’s²r sdq “for all true friends”. MCAM: correct reading.

Commentary:
There is no w before ts²wq in the copy as read by HCH although from the photograph there does seem to be one. The reading however is somewhat unclear. The final part of the text read by HCH belongs to HCH 191.1. NB sdq may be a technical term. It was used by the Manichaеans for "initiates" as opposed to "samмā‘" for novices or "hearers" [Trimingham 1979: 143].

Commentary:
ʾd would be haʾdu “afterwards” and ʾlt the IV form of fālata “he escaped” (Lane 2435 b). This is the first occurrence of this verb in Safaitic and shows that it was distinguished from the verb ʾlt “to save deliver”. The ḍ in ṭḏwt has the Thamudic E form occasionally found in Safaitic, especially in this name in which it is almost always used. The reading and interpretation of the end of the text are unclear.

By Mr son of Mk son of Wʾln son of --- Ṭ son of (It) and he grieved for Fsʾl and for ’mrn and (for) Sʾnt and he built for ’lbh the (cairn) untimely dead w tfḥr l- -h

Apparatus Criticus:
HFSI: it is possible Ṭ- ’bšlt or bšt should be restored before w wgm; w tfḥr l- -h "being proud of him". HDic p. 166: w tfḥr l- -h "and boasted of it". HIn p.405: ṭfrh for ’lbh. HST p. 7: tribal name bšt in a very doubtful reading. [MĀA V p. 93-94 appen. 3: m[k] for mr; end of the genealogy zryʾl bn ’lt; ’lbh for ‘lbh(?); w tfḥr lh "and he has glorified Lḥ". JMAA XIII p. 194-195: mg bn mk bn wʾln bn zryʾl bn ’lt w wgm ’l- ’fšl w ’l- ’mrn w ’l- ’sʾn’t w bny ’l- ’hb hš sʾgmt bn hgt ṭfr l- -h; translated from w bny as "and he built upon h [who] became familiar with sʾgmt son of Hgt. And wealth to him".

Commentary:
It is possible the first letter after the third bn is an ‘. There then appears to be two further letters and then a gap before the letters ’l which start on the next line. The following b is clear but there is then a dip in the rock with what seem to be encrustations obscuring the letter or letters before the l and t. It seems quite possible that there is a n after the b as suggested by [MĀA V which is perhaps followed by a circular letter which might be an ‘ or g as suggested in the edition. The interpretation of the letters after bny ’l- is difficult. It seems possible that there might be a further l between the ‘ and t read in the edition.

l ḥml {w} ts²wq l-mtq [-----] fr]+-----fr

By ḥml {and} he longed for Mtq [-----] rʿt -----fr

Apparatus Criticus:

HFSI: the fifth letter is read as a w but the commentary points out that it might be a g; fs¹r? is read at the end. JMAA V p. 95: ḥmlg for ḥml {w}; l mtqrʿt bnt fs¹rn "for Mtqrʿt daughter of Fs¹rn" at the end.

Commentary:

The reading of the fifth sign is quite clear but how it should be interpreted is problematic. HFSI points out that it could be w or a g. If it is interpreted as a w then there are two forms of the letter in the text one a circle with a dot in the middle and the other a circle with a line across although this is not necessarily an argument against such an interpretation see for example the instances in Thamudic E where different forms of letters occur in the same inscription (King 1990: 45-46 and n. 88). For a another variant form of w in this group of texts see HFSI 167801 where the crossbar in the circle is a short line and does not reach from one side of the circle to the other. There is a chip in the rock after the third t and the remains of what might be a t are visible. After the f HFSI and JMAA V have read an s¹. This might be correct but the smallness of the "sign" suggests that it might be natural holes such as cover the rest of the rock.

Commentary:

The third letter of the second name is probably a d of the type found occasionally in Hismaic where the stem is extremely short and the loop very large, see the script table in King 1990: 720 and the examples in KJA 26, KJB 79, KJC 241, etc. The only other typical Hismaic letter form is the d formed of two concentric circles, but this is also found in some Safaitic inscriptions. In the case of other letters, where there would be differences between their forms in Safaitic and Hismaic, h d s^2, they have their Safaitic forms Hayajneh’s interesting interpretation of the verb ḫll here as "to return to a profane condition" could be seen to be supported by Chelhod’s interpretation of the haram/halāl process in relation to sacrifice. He writes: "The very basis of sacrifice consists of liberating the dangerous element [derived from contact with the divine in a religious ceremony] and giving it back to the holy power, either by the shedding of blood — the liquid soul of the victim — or by total destruction as in the sacrifice of first-fruits... Rather than considering sacrifice as a gift, it would be more exact in the majority of cases to think of it as a voluntary restitution to the deity of the human[6] while performing religious acts]

----

Commentary:
This may be another, very fragmentary inscription on a block similar to the lintel bearing HrH 1. It was illegible.

Provenance:
Huĝayr al-Ḥelle, Rif Dimaṣq, Syria
A ruined building on the eastern edge of a small khabra surrounded by low cliffs (c. 5 m high), except on the north side which is open. Many large roughly dressed ashlar blocks. The building must have been quite substantial, possibly with ceilings supported by a central pillar as at Khirbat ‘Ar’ar. It was first discovered in 1858 by Wetzstein, who gives a poetic description of it, as well as rough measurements (1860: 61–62). It appears to have been in ruins even in his day. Note, this is not Haǧar al-Ḥelle (the reported provenance of C 633–861), which has yet to be located.

l ḥlf bn nʾrt bn ḥtm bn mlk w h- tyt

By Ḥlf son of ʿNʾrt son of Ḥtm son of ʿMlk and the sheep-fold

Commentary:
All the names are known and note that nʾrt occurs in WTI 81. The expression w h- tyt is unusual but compare l N w h- ṭrm in HCH 1 and 2. An alternative reading would be mlkw h- tyt. The translation of tyt as 'sheep-fold' follows WH but in fact it can mean a shelter for the night for any domestic animals or "stones elevated for a sign of the way to direct the pastor when he returns by night" (Lane 366a-b).

Provenance:
Unspecified site, unspecified region, unspecified country.
The stone was displayed at an exhibition of antiquities lent by the Saudi Arabian Deputy Ministry of Antiquities & Museums, held at the Institut du MondeArabe, Paris, in June 1998. There was no catalogue and no provenance was given.

Ishbikkat al-Namārah, Rif Dimashq, Syria
Ishbikkat al-Namāra was visited by most of the early explorers. It is shown on the maps of Wetzstein (1860) and Stübel (1889) as a large westward meander of the Wādī al-Shām before it continues its north-eastward
Corpus of Safaitic inscriptions

The major part of this meander is now under the lake of the Namārah dam and it is difficult, if not impossible, to locate its exact position and how far it extended both upstream towards the island and downstream. Indeed, it is not clear what exactly Ishbikkah was. Waddington writes of it as a ruğm (Chabot 1939: 366). On the other hand, de Vogué calls it simply "a point called Shikket el-Nemara on an escarpment on the side of the Wadi" (1860-1877: 146), while Dussaud & Macler write of the beginning of the Ichbikke" as if it was a topographical feature of some length (1901: 88).

By Gn son of Mʾll son of ḫmyn is the [drawing of the] female camel

Commentary:
On a stone taken from al-ʾİsāwī to the Suweidah Museum. Bʾrt: Note that in Arabic baʾīr applies to both male and female camels and there is no feminine form (Lane 226c–227a). The word is very rare in Safaitic with only one instance of h bʾr (RWQ 309) and bʾrt (here).

l ḫnnʾl bn ʾwsʾl bn kbsʾ w ḥṭb mn dīt

By ḫnnʾl son of ʾwsʾl son of Kbsʾ. And he collected firewood from a ʾdāl tree

Commentary:
Inscription and drawing found when planning the site in October 2003. It is c. 10m west of point 1 from which the north line was drawn. $Kbs^2$ does not seem to have been found before. The $k$ is peculiar but it is difficult to see what else it can be. $Htb$ is also new (compare Lane 593a-b) as is $dlt$ which would seem to be the nomen unitatis of $dâl$ which is said to be either a wild sidr tree or a tree growing on the borders of Yemen with a very pungent smell (see Lane 1816c). If it was the latter, the smell might be the factor which made the act remarkable enough to record.

Al-ʿĪsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wâdî Shâm as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namârah dam to the Rubbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower.

Al-ʿĪsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Ruḥbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower.

Commentary:

It is possible the third letter of the second name should be read as a q. K 44 which is a wasm is on the same rock. The translation of rʿy as "he tended or kept" is more appropriate here than "he pastured"; mrḥ is translated from Arabic murāḥ "nightly resting-place of cattle camels sheep or goats" (Lane 1183b). However Līsān also glosses mrḥ as al-arḍ al-saḥl.

\textit{l mddn bn zʿbrn}

By Mddn son of Zʿbrn

Apparatus Criticus:
LP: reads zʿb bn at the end and takes the inscription as incomplete but in the commentary suggests that if the inscription is complete the name at the end might be read zʿbrn. JSafN p.101: reads zʿr n at the end "he has cried out loudly". RyLPAdd p.350: zbrn for the last name.

Commentary:
The hammered dot read as ʿ is in a different technique to the other letters of the text and might with other hammered dots nearby be extraneous. There is sufficient room however between the z and b for another letter. The first b of the text is square and the second is rounded. There are traces of a scratched cartouche surrounding this inscription and H 79. It is possible that this should be identified with LP 954. See the commentary on K 171.

Al-ʿĪsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Ruḥbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower.

Commentary:
The bottom part of the first letter of the seventh name is covered by later hammering and it is possible that it is an 't. The beginning of the narrative has been destroyed by a crude, recently hammered sign. The author has written two connectives, w and f, after the word mzl. There is a slight abrasion over the former and it is possible that he realised his mistake and made an attempt to erase it.

Commentary:
LP implies that LP 515 occurs on a rock by itself but it seems likely that it is either the equivalence of this text or H 213 despite the fact that both of these texts occur on rocks with other inscriptions. As H 212 = LP 516 and H 214 = LP 217 it is possible that H 213 = LP 515 however the stance of the letters in LP’s copy and in this text are the same and which perhaps makes this identification more probable.

Commentary:
Associated drawing to be numbered. The reading of the second name is very doubtful. The line read as l after the second m is inscribed in a thicker technique than the other letters of the text. There is then a slightly rubbed area under which traces of an ʿ are visible. The last two letters are written to the left of the rest of the text. There is a cartouche surrounding the text and the drawing.

Al-ʿĪsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Ruḥbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower.

Commentary:
The second l is written at an angle to the s[^3]l and it is possible that the two letters should be read as a h. The second m is a different shape to the first one and the following n is partly covered by a chip. There is then another chip possibly covering a letter and a b written at 90° and a n.

Al-ʿĪsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Ruḥbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower.

Commentary:
On another face of the same boulder as H 628-636. The letters are joined by carelessly hammered ligatures. The loop of the d is infilled and hammered to join it to the preceding l and a line has been hammered along the edge of the rock to join it to the q. The line of the q has been thickened to attach it to the following b. There is a hammer mark joining the n to the ‘ which is then joined to the crossbar of the z. The following letters are obscure.

Al-ʿĪsāwī is the name of a probably ancient well between two headlands on the eastern side of the Wādī Shām as it runs northwards from the modern Al-Namārah dam to the Ruḥbah. The well is large, stone lined and with stone water-channels running from it. The main concentration of published inscriptions is on the top of the northern headland, but there also many inscriptions on its south-west slopes, coming down to the well and on the southern headland, on the crest of which is a stone tower.
